hen something is important to you, you want to tell people about it. Talking with others about your faith can start great conversations. And learning about traditions or places of worship in other faiths can build friendship and understanding.

But sometimes questions about spirituality and religion can be hard to answer. Others may not understand your beliefs, or they may think you're just wrong. If someone disagrees with you, what do you say? How do you share your beliefs with respect and peace?

WHAT DO YOU SAY?
