

Faith in Harmony

"In this wonderful new age, art is worship. The more thou strivest to perfect it, the closer will thou come to God." —'Abdu'l-Bahá

"We are dancing in the light of God!" The energy of this African song can touch people's hearts and bring them to their feet. It's the big finale at the Interfaith Music Fest. Everyone is singing, dancing, or clapping their hands with joy.

People in many religions use music to express their faith, tell stories, or share traditions. From Hindu chanting to upbeat Christian gospel songs, diverse types of sacred music can be found in temples, churches, synagogues, or outside in nature. In some religions, including the Bahá'í Faith, performing music can be a form of worship.

Exploring music from different cultures is a wonderful way to celebrate God's creation and to connect with people in faith and friendship. What sacred songs lift your spirit?

Search for items that bring joy and unity to the grand finale at an interfaith celebration.

