

COOPERATION KINGDOM

"Trustworthiness is in truth . . . the most glorious crown for your heads." —Bahá'u'lláh

In the South American rainforest, green and black poison dart frogs make a powerful parenting team. After the mother lays her eggs, the father cares for them and keeps them moist. When the tadpoles hatch, they climb on their father's back, and he carries them to a pool of water, where they grow into adult frogs.

Whether your family eats insects or ice cream, cooperation is king. Parents, siblings, grandparents, and other family and friends need to be able to count on each other. Each person brings unique skills and strengths to your circle of support. If you're talented with technology, you can help grandpa with his new phone. When you need a hand with math, he can jump in and help.

When you work together, you always know somebody's got your back. And that's a leap in the right direction!

Find 19 frogs (not tadpoles) in the rainforest kingdom.

GREEN AND BLACK POISON DART FROGS CAN HAVE EITHER GREEN OR BLUE COLORING.
