

Lovers of the Light

“Like a moth, one must be a lover of the light, in whatever lamp it may shine . . .” –Abdu’l-Bahá

When you’re outside on a summer night, look at your porch or camp light. You might see moths flying around it. Some experts say they’re actually looking for the Moon, because they use moonlight for navigation. Artificial lights confuse them.*

Like a moth using moonlight to guide its flight, we seek the light of spiritual truth in our journey to learn about life and our Creator. It can be hard to understand all the religions and beliefs in the world. Some people say their faith is the only true path to God.

Bahá’ís believe Messengers of all major religions offer paths to God, guiding people throughout history. While there are differences among religions, there are also similarities, such as teachings about prayer, fasting, and treating others kindly. When we explore all faiths with an open mind and heart, we can see the light of truth in every lamp.

Unscramble the letters in the moths’ wings to discover words that help us seek truth.

* This is also true for baby puffins. See brilliantstarmagazine.org/uploads/play/Puffins.pdf
Answers on page 28