

Talking About... The Reality of Racism

Since the time your parents and grandparents were kids, some progress has been made toward race unity. But the world still has a lot of work to do. Prejudice and racism cause intense pain and hardship. It can be discouraging and complicated.

To help get a better understanding, talk with an adult friend or family member from a different race or ethnicity. Try to put yourself in that person's shoes as they tell their stories. By listening with empathy and learning from others, we can help create a brighter future.

Name: _____

Race or ethnicity: _____

Birthplace: _____

Birth year: _____

Did you face prejudice or racism when you were growing up? If so, what happened? How did you handle it?

What changes have you seen in how people of different races get along?

Do you still face prejudice or racism today? If so, how?

What do you think would help end prejudice and racism?

What is something that you want people to know about your race or background?

Reflections

Something I learned from this interview: _____

Virtues I see in this person: _____

Something I'd like to learn more about as a result of this interview: _____

What do you think causes prejudice and racism?
